Deadline for submission of applications: February 2, 2017

Overview:

The Center of Excellence for Diversity in Health Education and Research is inviting applications for small research preceptorship funding to Minority Medical Students engaged in on-going research projects. The Center will provide two awards in a maximum amount of $3,000 per trainee to fund research projects. These funds are aimed at students who have an active role in a project focusing on minority health research that will lead to acquisition of research skills and knowledge. The research experience must be at least 8 weeks and at most 12 months in duration.

The research must have a minority health focus, defined as “basic, clinical, and behavioral studies including research to prevent, diagnose, and treat such conditions as diseases, disorders, and other conditions including mental health and substance abuse that are unique to, more serious in, or more prevalent in racial and ethnic minorities or for which the factors of medical risks or types of intervention may be different for such population groups. Readily identifiable clinical projects will have at least one principal objective/hypothesis related to minority health or the majority of the research participants will be minorities.”

Eligible candidates are under- represented minority (African American, Latino, Asian as defined by HRSA, and Native American) students in the School of Medicine who are engaged in an ongoing research project on site at the University and who are not currently being funded. A written report (indicating what was done, what population was served, and the results) should be submitted within sixty (60) days of the conclusion of the research experience.
